Excerpt: . . . private enterprises dividends are not customarily paid unless sufficient profits are earned to pay them, or unless a fund has been established out of previous profits for the equalization of dividends, the interest upon bonds issued on the credit of the public must be paid whether profits are earned or not. A conspicuous case of the disadvantage of public ownership under conditions of depression is afforded by the parallel cases of the docks at Liverpool and at London. In the former case the docks are under the control of a public body, while in the latter case they are under control of joint stock companies. The Mersey Dock Board was obliged to pay interest upon its bonds during a long period prior to 1886, although the docks were not yielding interest, while during the same period the dividends and interest upon the shares and bonds of the chief London docks were cut down to a nominal amount, or suspended altogether. The illusion that profits are inherent in industrial enterprises not only tends to induce the public to sanction increased expenditures upon services undertaken by a public authority, but also tends to induce opposition to the increase of capital by private enterprises where legislative authority is necessary to increase such capital. It is obvious to anyone who studies individual fluctuations that the investment of capital does not necessarily involve return in the form of interest. Large sums were invested, for example, by the municipalities and...
