Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: .which has followed the discovery of the causes of disease, the opportunities for service have multiplied. Now and in the future the physician must be interested in the welfare of society, generally. He has not done his duty when he has prescribed, merely, for his patient, and this is particularly true of his charity patient. When the doctor looks, says Cabot, for the root cause of most of the sickness that he is called upon to help, he finds social conditions, such as vice, ignorance, overcrowding, sweat shops and poverty. If a vice is preying upon the public, he must be an instrument for its removal. If ignorance is harassing his people, he must teach them. If they are overcrowded in dwellings as in workshops, he must labor for laws to prevent such things. Is there poverty? He must help in finding the cause and in removing it. Is there a better field for service? PANCREATITIS AS A FACTOR IN DIGESTIVE DISORDERS. BY W. D. HAINES, M.D., CINCINNATI. The pancreas has a medical and surgical history which is unique for its incompleteness. Being one of the principal organs of digestion, and essential to life, the pancreas should hold a peculiar interest, not alone for the pathologist but likewise for the internist and surgeon. While calculi may and do form in this gland just as they do in other duct-bearing glands, infection and malignant disease with or without stone formation are of infinitely more common occurrence...
