When a proposed location evidently combines the above interests advantageously, instead of bringing them into conflict, then there is no doubt as to the proper location, unless it affects unduly the adjacent location. The best engineering ability is a cheap investment when deciding on a location which requires a delicate balancing of the claims of several possible routes, each with its own combination of greater or less initial cost, greater or less operating expenses, and greater or less effect on the probable revenue of the road. Reconnaissance Surveys. 3. Essential Problem. From the above considerations it may readily be seen that the first survey to be made (called the reconnaissance survey) consists essentially of a broad examination of the country through which the road is expected to pass. Business considerations usually predetermine that the road is to connect certain termini and also pass through certain intermediate important towns or cities, but the problem consists in finding the best route between the predetermined points. When two consecutive predetermined points lie in the same valley or on the same bank of a river too large to be easily bridged, the location is self-evident. If the river is smaller, easily bridged, has sharp bends, with variable banks and important towns on either bank, it will usually require a close examination of each bank to determine where to cross if at all. When the two points are many miles apart, lie in different valleys, and are therefore separated by one or more summits, the selection of the best route becomes more...
